MASTER OF ARTS IN THE FIELD OF PHILOSOPHY

The Master of Arts degree in Philosophy develops the critical thinking, close reading, persuasive writing and oral communication skills needed for success in a doctoral program or teaching career. Students that graduate from this degree track often go on to obtain their PhD in Philosophy or a related field, such as political theory, biomedical ethics and gender studies. Others draw upon the broad base of philosophical knowledge to instruct at a secondary or two-year college level. Unlike other Philosophy MA degrees, this program includes a high degree of analytical philosophy curriculum in addition to the more traditional study of historical texts and scholarship.

Students pursuing this two-year terminal Master’s in Philosophy can expect to gain a distinct and in-depth education across a variety of courses. Classes such as “Economic Justice,” “Moral Status,” and “Feminist Ethics and Policy” teach the practical applications of philosophy and schools of thought on contemporary issues, while “Advanced Logic” and “Philosophy of Artificial Intelligence” develop knowledge in the areas of logic and science. Additionally, students study contemporary continental theories and the classics, such as Plato and Socrates.

Located in the heart of Washington D.C., GW has access to a wealth of museums, cultural institutes and other notable resources to enhance the graduate studies experience.
