This dual degree program is designed for qualified students who are interested in earning a master’s degree in legal institutions and theory in addition to an undergraduate degree in political science. All requirements for both programs must be fulfilled.

Students in the dual program pursue a curriculum that substitutes a specified number of graduate-level credits for upper-division undergraduate courses. These credits are applied to the requirements for both the bachelor’s and master’s degrees, which allows students to complete both programs more quickly and at a lower cost than if the degrees were pursued separately.

Undergraduate students who are interested in the dual program should consult with their advisor.
