MASTER OF ARTS IN THE FIELD OF CRIMINOLOGY

GW's master of arts in criminology program emphasizes that crime and criminal justice need to be understood in social context, informed by strong research skills and theoretical rigor. Drawing on criminology's roots in sociology, racism and police abuse of force are as much the subject matter of our program as are classes in punishment, and criminal law. Through research and coursework, students develop an understanding of how societies define, facilitate or reduce crime and the social conditions that contribute to crime and its control.

Criminology graduate students gain an excellent grounding in theory (criminology, deviance and control, and sociology), various quantitative and qualitative research methods, and criminal law. Students choose substantive classes from both within the Department of Sociology and in other fields of study in the University (e.g., forensic science, terrorism, gender studies) or through the Consortium of Universities of the Washington Metropolitan Area (https://consortium.org/). Students may choose from program options comprising either five elective courses and a comprehensive examination or three electives and a six-credit thesis through guided independent research and writing, for 36 credits in total.

The Department’s dedicated faculty works with a small graduate student body, allowing for strong professional relationships among both the faculty and graduate cohort. Being in Washington, DC, expands opportunities for internships, jobs, research, and exposure to a diverse, vibrant, and engaging city and metro area. Financial aid is offered to select academically competitive students. Salary-only graduate teaching assistantships are available to many of our students—graduate assistant experience is an additional source of professional expertise. While most of MA students have undergraduate backgrounds in sociology or other social sciences, students from an array of fields, from finance to various quantitative and qualitative research methods, and criminal law.
