MASTER OF ARTS IN THE FIELD OF SOCIOLOGY

Students in GW’s master of arts in sociology program receive a thorough grounding in sociological theory (classical and contemporary) and various quantitative and qualitative research methods. These core requirements are supplemented by substantive focus in three major fields: Inequality (race, class, gender, immigration, etc.), Urban Sociology, and Criminology. (The Department also offers an MA in criminology program (http://bulletin.gwu.edu/arts-sciences/sociology/ma-criminology/).) The sociology program’s interdisciplinary emphasis is reflected in the availability of electives in other departments and through the Consortium of Universities of the Washington Metropolitan Area (https://consortium.org/). Both the thesis and coursework allows students to gain hands-on experience conducting research and developing skills in data collection and analysis.

The Department’s dedicated faculty works with a small graduate student body, allowing for strong professional relationships among both the faculty and graduate cohort. Being in Washington, DC, expands opportunities for internships, jobs, research, and exposure to a diverse, vibrant, and engaging city and metro area. Financial aid is offered to select academically competitive students. Salary-only graduate teaching assistantships are available to many of our students—graduate assistant experience is an additional source of professional expertise. While most of MA students have undergraduate backgrounds in sociology or other social sciences, students from an array of fields, from finance to neuroscience, are welcome in the program.

Graduates of the MA in sociology program go on to research and social change work in the government, nonprofit, and business sectors, as well as pursue PhD and JD degrees.
