MINOR IN SOCIOLOGY

The minor in sociology is a popular choice for students majoring in political science, psychology, forensic sciences and a variety of other fields. The highly flexible curriculum includes just two core courses that introduce students to basic sociological theory as well as the “sociological imagination” and how it connects to public issues surrounding race, gender, inequality and education. The remaining 12 credits can be chosen from electives including Social Problems in American Society, Techniques of Data Analysis, Sociology of Immigration, Sociology of Religion, and more.

Criminal justice majors may not pursue a minor in sociology.
