

MASTER OF ARTS IN EDUCATION AND HUMAN DEVELOPMENT IN THE FIELD OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION

Enrolled students, representing interests as far-ranging as educational programs for children in Ghana to international study programs in Asia, learn about traditions and systems of education in other nations and cultures. They also acquire skills and experience relevant to working in these programs. A growing number of internship opportunities, both in the United States and abroad, are made available to our students, who consistently earn prestigious full-time positions after graduation. The international education program boasts highly placed alumni in organizations such as USAID, the World Bank, the Agency for Educational Development, Save the Children, the Academy for Educational Development and the Institute of International Education, as well as in governments and universities all over the world. International education program faculty regularly draws on local experts and professionals from around the District of Columbia to enhance the curriculum. The program offers expertise in three areas: education and development, global education, and international higher education.

Students in this program also can enroll in and receive a graduate certificate in either:

- Assessment Testing and Measurement in Education (<http://bulletin.gwu.edu/education-human-development/educational-leadership/certificate-assessment-testing-measurement/>)
- Incorporating International Perspectives in Education (IPE) (<http://bulletin.gwu.edu/education-human-development/educational-leadership/certificate-incorporating-international-perspectives/>) or
- Teaching English Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) (<http://bulletin.gwu.edu/education-human-development/curriculum-pedagogy/certificate-teaching-english-speakers-other-languages/>).

Certain credits are applied toward both the master's degree and the certificate.
