MAGISTER OF PROFESSIONAL STUDIES IN THE FIELD OF STRATEGIC PUBLIC RELATIONS

Program Director: L. Parnell

The master of professional studies in strategic public relations program takes advantage of GW’s connections in the nation’s capital, focusing on the public policy system and the advocacy role played by PR firms and PR operations in corporations and associations. The Graduate School of Political Management (https://gspm.gwu.edu/) engages experts in both the PR and political arenas to serve as faculty. Students graduate prepared for professional advancement in the field.

The program consists of 10 courses (30 credits). Students may apply the coursework completed as part of the graduate certificate programs in public relations (http://bulletin.gwu.edu/professional-studies/certificate-programs/public-relations/#text), digital communications (http://bulletin.gwu.edu/professional-studies/certificate-programs/digital-communications/), or global public relations (http://bulletin.gwu.edu/professional-studies/certificate-programs/global-public-relations/) toward requirements for the strategic public relations master’s degree. Focus areas in the program include communications theory, ethics and law, digital media strategies, evaluating communications programs, crisis communications, media relations, and strategic planning.

Classes meet Monday through Thursday evenings at GW's Arlington Education Center. The program also may be completed online or in a hybrid format.

Visit the program website (http://gspm.gwu.edu/strategic-public-relations/) for additional information.
