EXERCISE AND NUTRITION SCIENCES

The Department of Exercise and Nutrition Sciences, housed within the only school of public health in the nation’s capital, offers programs that integrate the complementary disciplines of nutrition and exercise sciences. The curriculum spans undergraduate through doctoral programming and provides students with the opportunity to learn the science of how physical activity and nutrition affect the health and function of individuals, communities, and the greater society. Students within the department engage in research and applied learning experiences in settings as diverse as the National Institutes of Health, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Pentagon, professional sports teams, and local and national nonprofit organizations.
