

GRADUATE CERTIFICATE IN DIGITAL POLITICS

Since the first serious use of online campaigning by John McCain in 2000, online tools such as web advertising, interactive websites, complex social networking, and virtual fundraising have become central to success in politics, and especially in campaigns. In response to this phenomenon, we created a graduate certificate that teaches students how to master the world of online communications, networking, and fundraising.

The graduate certificate in digital politics consists of 18 credit hours (6 classes). Like the other certificate programs offered by the Graduate School of Political Management, any student who completes the certificate and successfully applies to the master's program can count all 18 credits towards the political management master's degree. The program also may be completed online or in a hybrid format.
